

DAILY EVENING BULLETIN.

FRIDAY EVENING, DEC. 9, 1881.

In wheat there is a hidden fire;
As we have lately learned,
For, friends of ours, in handling it
Have had their fingers burned.

The river is about stationary to-day.

ONLY 12,900 bushels of barley were reported in this county for 1880.

The marriage of Dennis Madden and Kate Watson, colored, was solemnized at the colored Methodist church, on Thursday evening, in the presence of a large gathering of their friends, by Rev. Courtney the pastor. The contracting parties are good citizens and are well thought of in the community.

RICHESON & BRO., whose advertisement is printed elsewhere to supply the wants of the holiday season, have provided themselves with a most tempting array of goods in that line. They have all the delicacies the season suggests, and their prices are very low. Fine candies are a specialty.

TIM. MENDELL, who has lately opened a bakery and confectionery on Second street, below Sutton, has received recently a large stock of pure candies, nuts of all kinds and many other goods that will be in demand during the holidays. The public will find him a most obliging and reliable man of business, and his stock of the best quality and low in price.

When Robert Crain, of Hillsboro, Ky., went to the European Hotel in this city on the 28th ult., he represented that the lady, Miss Thompson, who was with him, was his wife, and under the impression that his statement was true they were assigned to a room together. Persons employed about the hotel were in the room several times during the evening and saw nothing that indicated the two were not man and wife. If the lady had been brutally treated or imposed upon she had ample opportunity to make known the fact and to have secured protection. If anything of the kind occurred the people about the house had no intimation of it.

In Memoriam.

Died December 6th, 1881, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. T. N. Ralston near Newport, Ky., of pneumonia, Conrad Phister, an old and well-known resident of this city.

Mr. Phister was born in Philadelphia, on the 12th of October 1795, and was, at his death in the 87th year of his age. He was the support of a widowed mother and a large family of brothers and sisters, almost during his entire boyhood. At the proper age he apprenticed himself to his uncle (by marriage) John Rudy, of sainted memory in this place, to learn the carpenter trade. With Mr. Rudy he came to the west, intending to locate in Louisville; they came over the Alleghenies in wagons, and from Brownsville down the Ohio in boats built by themselves. Landing at "Limestone" as Maysville was then called, to get provisions, they found carpenters in great demand, and were persuaded by Johnson Armstrong, the enterprising man of the town to stop and locate, which they did. This was in the year 1814, just at the time Kentucky was raising and sending large bodies of troops to Gen. Jackson, at New Orleans, whose great victory, although already achieved was not known. This landing for provisions at Limestone, a simple thing in itself changed the whole life of this man and was of far reaching influence upon the destiny of generations.

The first house built by them was the brick still standing at the south east corner of Front and Sutton. This, at that day, was a very fine house and fully sustained the reputation of its Philadelphia builders, the subject of this sketch doing the inside finish and stairway then considered a feat in workmanship.

Attaining his majority a little while after this Mr. Phister married Miss Mary Conner a young lady from the Eastern shore of Maryland, on a visit to relations here. He moved the morning of his marriage into a residence he had bought and furnished, and he occupied the same continuously from that time until within a couple of years of his death, a period of sixty-five years.

Five sons and two daughters were born to him in this house by his first wife, and two sons by his second wife, Mrs. Charity Grimes; all of these children are alive to-day except two, and were at his funeral.

One arriving from far distant Colorado, another from Washington City, where he represents this district in the congress of the United States, two from Newport, Ky., and another from "up and down the river" which he plies as the first clerk of one of our beautiful floating palaces; and thus all his immediate family were, by good fortune, gathered together to nurse him in his last illness, and follow his remains to their last resting place in the family lot in our beautiful cemetery.

Mr. Phister carried on the building business as Phister & Rudy, and alone for nearly a half century, in this city, and as the leading carpenters erected most of the fine houses in this place, all of them are still standing testimonials of his skill. He had much natural ability as an architect, and if he had been in a large city, emulation and rivalry would have made him distinguished in this line. He was an honest and conscientious builder and would not slight his work preferring not to get a job at all rather than take it at such rates as would compel dishonest work.

Mr. Phister, was man of fine mind, was well read and thoroughly informed on the current topics of the day, and had very positive convictions as to men and things social, religious and political.

He was a modest and retiring man, never thrusting himself forward or asserting himself as he might have done with propriety, and which his social position and standing would have justified and made eminently proper. He had no ambition in this way and preferred quiet and ease. To the outside world he was reserved and cold; to his family and friends he was warm and genial and companionable. He was especially fond of children. He was a good husband and father and neighbor and citizen. He was never demonstrative, but was prompt and decided in the fulfillment of every obligation in the walks of life. He attended strictly to his own business and never interfered with that of his neighbors. If there was any one trait of his character more conspicuous than another this was the one. He raised many apprentice boys, several of whom were present as old men at the grave to-day. He was held in high esteem by all who knew him, rich and high as well as the poor and lowly.

Mr. Phister never connected himself with any religious denomination, but attended, as a general thing, the services of the Methodist Church. In his religious views he was liberal, he cared little for creeds or confessions of faith. His religion was to do your duty to your fellow-men and the world at large; doing all the good you can; living out the eleventh commandment to the best of your ability, and God would take care of the future. He took no stock in everlasting punishments, but had an abiding faith in the goodness of God, and a sublime reliance in an overruling providence, and an unswerving submission to the idea that "the God of all the earth will do right."

Living a careful and regular life, never violating any of nature's laws, and strictly observing hygienic rules as to diet and sleep and sun and air, he lived far beyond the psalmists "three score and ten" in robust health and mental and bodily vigor, free from disease and pain, and was a splendid example for imitation for all who would put off "being old" to the latest possible period of life.

"He came to his grave like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season," and he leaves the memory of a well spent life as a sweet heritage to his many descendants.
